SETA-Sacramento Works Adds Training Centers to Address Workforce Skill Gap Shortages

Over the next decade, the increase in globalization and the rapidly changing economy accompanied by unprecedented labor market volatility will require workers to gain higher skill levels. Earning a post-secondary degree or credential is no longer just a pathway to opportunity for a talented few; it will become a prerequisite for the high demand jobs of the new economy. Workers will need more access education and training.

To address the looming skills gap fueled by dramatic demographic shifts in the labor force, SETA-Sacramento Works is implementing a workforce system that includes:
